A RETURNED ANGELO.

A Trip from the Yellowstone on the Great Northern.

A Texas representative had the pleasure of meeting yesterday Mr. Conrad Schwager, formerly a resident of Los Angeles. Mr. Schwager, during the dull times of 1879, went to Arizona, where he remained only a short time, where he had been for over three years in the stock business. His location was up near the Yellowstone and his stock business was a failure. On his return, he joined a party who came on horseback from the Yellowstone to San Francisco, a distance of over 1,000 miles, and he remained there for three months. He gives a graphic description of the trip and says he feels ten years younger for having taken it.

Cattle News.

A gentleman from Calico informs the Times that the King and Mammoth mines are doing remarkably well. Both have well defined ledges, and both are turning out bullion in considerable quantities. The King is sunk at an angle of 45°, and the lower tunnel is in very rich ore. It is the intention of the company to sink a shaft at an early date. The Mammoth is not so well developed, but as it is a continuation of the same ledge, it has no doubt to equal well. The Garfield is also promising. Besides these, there are many good claims owned by men of small means, who are working them with a view to profitably develop them. Here is a fine chance for our capitalists to invest their surplus funds and realize a large dividend or become bonanza princes.

Progress at the Pavilion.

Mr. Gary has a force of men busily engaged in decorating the new Horticultural Pavilion. The building is a fine structure, and First streets, and everything is laid out in a fine manner. The pavilion is a fine structure, and First streets, and everything is laid out in a fine manner. The pavilion is a fine structure, and First streets, and everything is laid out in a fine manner.

Government Lands.

Yesterday, in a visit to the office of H. J. Stevenson, Deputy U. S. Surveyor, at No. 5 Kuhns' new building, a Texas reporter found that at the present time there is considerable inquiry for government lands. It may not be generally known, but there is still a large quantity of public land in this vicinity, and some of it is of very good quality. Every day inquiries are made, and a number of locations have been selected that in a year or two will be valuable.

A Valuable Cat.

A rancher living near town has a cat which is an invaluable assistant, being death to gophers, squirrels and snakes. She has a litter of half-grown kittens, and it is their particular delight to have a rattlesnake to tear up. Puss catches the snake behind the head, lifts it up and around her and then takes it up to her kittens, who soon learn its place. There are no snakes and very few squirrels on the place, thanks to the cat.

IT'S SETTLED NOW.

It has come to light at last—Benny's intention to leave Los Angeles—Benny's intention to leave Los Angeles—Benny's intention to leave Los Angeles.

Rumors have been rife in the city for weeks that have at last slowly made their way to the surface, which will create a big sensation in Los Angeles and the entire surrounding vicinity. It reminds one of the tales of the Arabian Nights, where it speaks of a huge magnetic mountain, which, acting upon the iron in ships, irresistibly attracted them for a distance of hundreds of miles. Substituted for the mountain and all the marvellous wonders of the world for the entrapped vessels, and we have a striking modern realization of the eastern romance as well as a key to the extraordinary success of John Robinson and his associates in the business of the world.

The greatest showman of all time, John Robinson, will exhibit his great modern combination of ten big brand-new shows combined with the old-fashioned variety show. John Robinson and his associates will surely come to Los Angeles, October 10th, with the Great Three King Circus, and give two grand performances, afternoon and night, as well as a grand show and water runs. Turn out from mountain top and glen, from valley and plain, and have a hand at the big show, which will surely come to Los Angeles, October 10th, with the Great Three King Circus, and give two grand performances, afternoon and night, as well as a grand show and water runs.

The Orphan's Fair.

Last night the orphan's fair at Turner Hall had a better attendance than on the previous evening. The attendance was not so large as at previous fairs, but those who attended contributed liberally. The ladies of the fair were zealous in the work, and certainly the orphan's will be benefited by their efforts. To-night is the last night and there will be an enjoyable time. The evening's program will be a grand one, and there will be in their holiday attire and there will, undoubtedly, be a large attendance. Mr. Connolly, the ticket agent, informs the Times that the fair will be quite a financial success.

Mr. J. F. Berry, of Newport, brought into our office last week samples of the fruit grown on his place. On one twig there were a cluster of eighteen apples, on another, sixteen pears, and on a third, nineteen pears. This fruit was all large, full grown, though not fully ripe. The majority of the pears would weigh a pound each.

Deputy Sheriff Davidson arrested four Chinamen last Saturday, charged with selling and smoking opium. One was sent to jail by Judge Freeman, two fined $15 each, and one $5, in consideration of his being sick. It is said white boys have been seen in the houses of the Chinamen, and it is going there to smoke the deadly drug. The Judge warned the Chinamen to keep the boys, especially, away from their premises.

ORIGIN OF OUR VOLCANO.

What an Old Resident Knows About It.

From the Santa Barbara Independent.

Mr. N. J. McCloskey, of Carpinteria, who resided several years at the Rincon, in the vicinity of the much-talked-of "volcano," furnishes the following brief history of the hot hole in the mountain. About ten years ago, when coal oil prospectors were rambling about this section of the coast, he was one of the first to identify with the coal oil well in Ventura county, decided upon driving a tunnel into the face of Mount Santa Barbara on the ocean side, with the intention to ascertain the true and definite trend or slope of the rock layers or strata in the heart of the mountain. The desired to ascertain what prospect there was for striking oil where the hot air was forcing its way to the surface as it does to-day through the so-called volcano. A tunnel was driven into the mountain from a point near the beach. When the workmen had reached a point about 250 feet deep it had become so hot that work had to be discontinued. About this time a party of scientists was sent from San Francisco to investigate and discover the true character of the hot air hole. They were guided to the hot air hole by Mr. McCloskey, and they decided that there was no indication of petroleum, but that the heat which exuded from the fissure upon the surface of the mountain was the result of a combination of iron, sulphur and copper, which, brought in contact, had created the heat, and the heat, in turn, had created the steam, which was forced out of the mountain by the pressure of the steam.

KISSING HIS WIFE.

A Remarkable Scene in a St. Petersburg Court.

[Moscow News.]
There have been many cases in which kisses have been considered in courts of justice, and not only considered, but valued in money and paid for. But we have never heard until now that husbands could be sentenced to pay for kissing their wives. The District Court of this city, by a recent decision, now warns all husbands that it is not always safe to kiss even their own lawful wives.

On August 6th the case of "Kochergin against Kochergin" was tried in the District Court. Catherine Kochergin sued her husband, Ivan Kochergin, for 1000 roubles, due on two bills of exchange given by him to her. The plaintiff, a young and pretty woman, and well dressed, appeared in person.

"Ivan Kochergin!" cried the Court.
In answer to the call the defendant appeared. He was a merchant of middle age, with the manners characteristic of his class. He was in a jolly state.

"Here we are," he said, coming up before the bench; and then turning to his wife he added, sweetly smiling:
"Catherine Stepanovna, why should we quarrel?"

"You are in court," said the presiding Judge, severely. "This is not the place for personal explanations."

Mrs. Kochergin then presented two bills of exchange to the Court.

"Is this your signature on these bills?" the defendant was asked.

"Yes, it is mine," was the answer;
"there is no use of denying that. But I am not going to pay them, for they are worthless and invalid. I will tell you how I came to give them. Catherine Stepanovna, my wife, several times left my house and went to her father, Mr. Shustoff. But I love her so fondly that I could not stay long without her; so I went to see her.
'Do you want your wife?' asked Shus-toff; 'if so, sign this bill.' And I did sign it; I signed two of them. I gave the bills, not in exchange for money, but on account of my love, for kisses from my wife. Oh, how I am fond of her! If your Honor orders me to pay these bills it will be highway robbery!" roared the defendant.

"Behave yourself," admonished the Court.

"Ah, my dear soul, I understand."
"I am not your soul at all," roared the Court, "and I will punish you if you do not come to your senses."

But the defendant would not listen to the Court. He turned his smiling face to his wife, flung her kisses with his hand, and said:

"Catherine Stepanovna! how dearly I love you!"

Roars of laughter shook the courtroom. For a moment even the Judges could not control their features. The plaintiff blushed, and the defendant continued ardently to profess his love for his wife. When order had been restored the Court announced the verdict. The defendant was ordered to pay 1000 roubles to his wife, and in case he did not pay, his house was to be attached.

"It is a downright robbery," shouted the defendant.

The Court ordered Mr. Kochergin to leave the room at once. Meanwhile

Mrs. Kochergin started out with her father, but the defendant rushed after, crying: "Catherine Stepanovna! Kate!
My darling! I love you!"

The auditors rushed after them, laughing, stamping and applauding.
The pretty plaintiff took a droshki and hurried away, and poor Ivan Kochergin ran after her with his arms outstretched and shouting:

"Oh, Kate, how I love you!"

How "Spoopendyke" Reported an Agricultural Meeting.

[Washington Republican.]

It is an old story, but good enough to bear repeating.

About the first newspaper work Stanley Huntley, the "Spoopendyke" the New York Tribune, when Greeley was its editor. His maiden assignment was to report a convention of eminent agriculturists. It struck the newly-fledged reporter that the delegates did not know what they were talking about, and he alluded to them frequently in the course of his report as a parcel of old women and idiots, who hadn't the remotest idea of practical agriculture. As he sat at his desk rounding out his report and filling in a few adjectives indicative of his disapproval of the proceedings of the day and the men who participated, he noticed a man at the other end of the room shooting copy through a tube into a composing room. When he was done, the man who had been feeding the tube was out of his seat, and the innocent Huntley fired his own matter to the foreman without submitting it to the man at the tube, who, as he afterwards learned, was the city editor.

The next day he was summoned before Horace Greeley, who opened out on him a stream of profanity that made Huntley's hair stand on end. It was evident that the great editor was not pleased with the new man's effort, and the luckless author received a dressing down he never forgot. At the first break of the torrent of invectives that flowed from the good man's lips, Huntley ventured to ask if his report was not correct, and if the first duty of a reporter was not to state facts.

"Yes, of course, but you could have stated the facts without calling the convention a congregation of idiots;" and then followed more language in italics.

"But were they not a set of blanked old idiots?" timidly inquired the victim of the great editor's wrath.

"Yes, I suppose they were," he despairingly exclaimed, thoroughly exhausted, and realizing the poverty of language in dealing with such a subject, "but blankety, blank, blank your fool soul, I was one of them myself.
I was president of the meeting."

A Southerner's Opinion of General Custer.

[Cor. Cincinnati News Journal.]

The other man was a little flaxen-haired knight errant who, when he ought to have been singing love songs on the Rhine, was teaching a lot of Michigan lumbermen to ride like Centaurians and fight like devils, and his name was Gen. G. A. Custer. He was a dapper little tawny-headed thunderbolt who loved his sabre like a nun does the Virgin Mary, and was never happy unless he was using it. He went at a fight like it was a backwoods frolic, and had an infectious kind of courage like small-pox, and all of his men caught a dangerous case of it.

I knew him to my sorrow at Opequan and at Bunker Hill and Perryville, Charleston and Darkesville, and worst of all, at Winchester, on September 19, 1864. Some of our cavalry couldn't or wouldn't amuse him, and he had to charge infantry every day or two to keep his nerves quiet. In my judgment he was the cavalry man of the war, and worth more to the Union cause than all the other cavalry commanders. We learned to know him and to know his ways in the valley of Virginia, even knew the whistle of the two infernal little pieces of light artillery he had with his brigade, and we knew that a braver man or better soldier never lived. I wish space allowed me to say more of him, for I feel that this short notice does not do justice to the little hero. After the war I met him here, and he made a practice of coming down every year. His methods in love were the same as in war, and men and women here liked him even before the bitter feelings were gone, for he was as typical a Kentuckian as could be found. He loved a horse, a woman and a mint julep; was ready for a fight or frolic, and the fellow that called him on four aces always found him with a straight flush or a navy pistol in his hand. He lived like a troubadour and died like a knight of the round table, and so long as heroism is a virtue, and manly courage is commendable, every American will be proud of his achievements, be he rebel or be he Yank.

Ingenious Young Women.

[From the Troy Telegram.]

Monday there was a big excursion from the collar shops to Saratoga.
Hundreds of Troy's pretty young ladies went to Saratoga.

The sky threatened rain.

The young ladies wore bustles.

Perhaps there was no connection between the threatening sky and the bustles—and perhaps there was.

Shortly after the excursionists reached Saratoga the rain began to pour. Many of the young ladies with their escorts were seated in the parlor of a hotel when the rain began to fall.
The prospect was dismal as viewed from the hotel windows. Within it seemed sad, too. The airy and tasty dresses of the excursionists must be spoiled by a venture on the street. Umbrellas were few and far between, and there seemed an entire dearth of outside coverings.

But witness the ingenuity of the young ladies of the day.

As if by preconcerted action the young ladies arose one after the other and left the parlor.

In a few minutes they returned.

All wore gossamer cloaks.

But the bustles were gone.

With all his knowledge of deadly drugs, a leading physician of Wilmington, Del., could think of no better way of committing suicide than the old-fashioned way of hanging. He walked with a cheerful "good morning," through a friend's office into an inner room, where he was found hanging from a coat hook and lifeless fifteen minutes later.

THE BEAUTIFUL CONGO.

Jottings by a Correspondent in Africa With Stanley.

Ordinarily the Congo is beautiful in detail, imposing as a whole, writes the London Telegraph correspondent who is with Stanley. Indeed for a river of its magnitude, it would need Alps to form suitable cliffs for such a breadth of water. In this portion, however, some of the general effects are strikingly impressive. A splendid expanse of stream reflects on its placid surface the blue sky and creamy white clouds above it; on the side are green hills and purple woods, and on the other the inimitably graceful borassus palms which, in rows and groups, rise on their slender trunks high above the low green shrubs, and crown majestically the long spits of white sand that launch themselves bodily into the shining, all reflecting river. The Zanzibaris have found a fine fish just caught in one of the native basket-work traps, and they ask permission to stop at some sand-bank and cook it. This is accorded, and we are soon alongside a long reach of sand on which some Bayanzi are already seated. Of course our reception is cordial, and while the Zanzibaris are commencing the cooking I go off to see the village close by, called Mbila. It is a pretty, contented, quiet-looking spot, embosomed in great groves of bananas and surrounded by plantations of manioc. At the time I enter, except a few women who are attending to their household duties, every one is absent on the beach, chaffing with the Zanzibaris; therefore I have it pretty much to myself, but my arrival causes much excitement among the fowls and dogs, who apparently are frightened at my white face, and fly in all directions. The fowls cackle and screech, but the dogs are too awe struck to make any noise; indeed, in this country they never seem to have acquired the power of barking. In front of several dwellings are signs of domestic avocations actively going on. Large jars and other vessels of pottery are standing to dry in the sun, and basket-work in all its stages is lying about. The houses are well constructed and well kept, and the people who are now flocking back to the village look well fed and prosperous. Involuntarily the thought comes to me, what a contented, peaceful sort of life this is. Few wants, and those easily supplied; no luxury and no starvation; no yearnings after the unknown; no vague, unsatisfied aspirations, and no heart-breaking; everything thoroughly positive, well ordered and material. How will this meet the shock of advancing civilization—of the approaching contact of black and white? The natives tell me I am the first of my color who has set foot in their village, and they seemed proud and rejoiced at my visit. May they never look back to it with sorrow as marking the advent of a new and sorrowful change in their hitherto peaceful annals.

A Little Story of the Great War.
From the Fredericksburg Free Standard.]

The lodge of Masons in which George Washington was "initiated, passed and raised," Fredericksburg, No. 4, was pillaged in 1862, when that town was attacked by hostile soldiery, the lodge safe blown open and the records, regalia, jewels, etc., carried off. Among the articles taken was an old jewel of solid silver in the form of a "level," highly prized by the lodge for its antiquity. The old relic was recently discovered by the secretary of Integrity Lodge, No. 158, A. F. and A. M., of Philadelphia, in the safe of that lodge, where it had been deposited for safe keeping during the war by a former member of Integrity Lodge, who had recovered it from a soldier who acknowledged having taken it from the lodge room of No. 4. A note tacked to the jewel required its delivery to No. 4 "when the State of Virginia should cease to be in open rebellion against the authority of the government of the United States." The jewel was returned last Friday night to lodge No. 4.

These baths are recommended by the best physicians for diseases of the Liver, Kidneys, etc. Following is the certificate of the analysis of the mineral waters which constitute the baths. It is made by one of the best analytical chemists in the United States: SAN FRANCISCO, May 19, 1882.

Mrs. Andrelle Puigsegur, Los Angeles, Cal.: I have made a qualitative chemical analysis of the water and find it to contain 27.414 grains of solid matter in a U. S. gallon of 231 cubic inches, and to consist of the following: Bicarbonate Calcium, Bicarbonate Magnesium, Chloride Sodium, Sulphate Sodium, Bicarbonate Sodium, Alumina, Silica, Oxide (traces), Sulphuretted Hydrogen (traces), Organic Matter (traces). The almost entire absence of organic matter commends it as the most wholesome of waters. W. T. WENZELL.

Holding the Reins.
A good driver always grasps the rein so that it passes into the hand under the little finger first, the ends of the fingers, after the hand is closed upon the rein, being in a perpendicular line. This gives a vice-like grip which it is almost impossible for the leather to slip through. But the wrong habit young drivers, and especially ladies fall into, is to catch the rein in such a way that when it enters the hand it first passes over the fore-finger; when held in that way it is very hard to keep it from slipping, and so it happens that when an excited horse gives a quick jerk and the lady feels the line slip she thinks her strength is inadequate, loses her presence of mind, and in a few minutes somebody's hurt. If persons know how awkward a poor driver looks they would try to improve. There's nothing more ridiculous than a green driver with his arms stretched away out in front "pushing on the lines." On the other hand, there is no more pleasing sight than to see a well-trained driver, and especially in the person of a pretty girl, sitting erect, with hands close to her slender waist, the rein curling cutely over her delicate thumb and the whip grasped firmly, arching over the horse's back, thread her way without nervousness or fear through narrow, crowded streets, or on broad avenues, leave her timid friend behind. In England fox-hunting has such a hold upon the people that a girl is taught to ride almost before she learns anything else. In France the pleasure of individual driving has never worked its way into the French woman's mind. In this country there is a change coming, but it is scarcely visible at present except at the fashionable centers where a few of the leading ladies are noted as horsewomen. A New York lady enjoys almost as much distinction as a queen, simply because she knows how to dispense with the services of a coachman and tone up her system by manipulating the ribbons over a trotter's back as she flies along the ocean drives.

Water Analysis.

SAN FRANCISCO, September 18, 1882.
For Mr. Victor Beaudry, Los Angeles: I have carefully analyzed the sample of water —marked as under—and find the following to be the proportions in every 100 parts: [Mark of sample, Los Angeles.] Solid residue, 29.16 grains per United States gallon.
Chlorine, 2.39 grains per United States gallon.
Ammonia (free and combined), .085 milli-gram per litre.
Albuminoid ammonia, 12 milligram per litre.
The water does not indicate the presence of any injurious ingredient in abnormal quantities, and is a good quality of water for domestic purposes.
It is free from any sewage contamination.
Respectfully submitted,
THOMAS PRICE, M. D.

NOTICE.

To whom it may concern: I take pleasure to lay before the public the above certificate of analysis of the water from the

BEAUDRY WATER WORKS
knowing, as I do, that good pure water is most essential to the health of the consumer.
